CHAPTER I

THE year 1866 was signalised by a remarkable incident, a mysterious and puzzting phenomenon, which doubtless no one has yet forgotten. Not to mention rumours which agitated the maritime population and excited the public mind, even in the interior of continents, scafaring men were particularly excited. Merchams, common sailors, captains of vessels, skippers, both of Europe and America, naval officers of all contaries, and the Governments of several States on the two continents, were deeply interested in the matter.

For some time past vessels had been met by "an enormous thing," a long object, spindle-shaped, occasionally phosphorescent, and infinitely larger
